A group of Rochester business leaders spent the day lobbying for dollars in Albany. They arrived home Monday night after meeting with Lieutenant Governor Bob Duffy and other lawmakers. They're trying to get funding for projects at RIT and the U of R and construction on 390.

Sandy parker, from the Rochester Business Alliance, says they received a good response. Acting Mayor Carlos Carballada and two city council members will also meet the lieutenant governor tomorrow. They're heading to Albany to ask for more state aid for the city.
