Rochester, NY -- Most people who work downtown will tell you, parking can be a hassle and expensive.

Many workers pay monthly fees to ensure they have a safe, convenient place to park.

The City of Rochester is working to make the commute easier for people who work downtown and to make it easier for visitors and tourists who come to Rochester.

They held a public meeting Monday to ask for input. Under consideration is a circulator transit service, which could include shuttle buses or streetcars to move people around downtown.

The Rochester Business Alliance and Downtown Development Corporation will also survey businesses about what transportation options they would prefer.

The study will be completed next December. The city is working with the Monroe County Department of Transportation, RGRTA, and others to explore a commuter transit system downtown.
